

As both a nurse, and one whose family was affected by a loved one with a brain injury, I appreciated the author's subjective viewpoint. Through her own experiences, she relates the depth of her fears, frustrations, losses and limitations. Through this vivid expression, she gives a perspective that those who suffer with brain injury and their loved ones can easily relate to. Her desire to reach out and educate others who are affected is clearly evident. She displays this with a unique sense of awareness, through which she endeavors to comfort and encourage.

Laurie, San Diego